Dear Commissioner Potočnik,

The undersigning non-governmental organisations, dedicated to the conservation of the environment and animal welfare, write to urge the EU Commission to take action against ongoing commercial whaling in Iceland, including the killing of an alarmingly high number of endangered fin whales.

Since Iceland resumed commercial whaling in 2006, its whalers have killed nearly 1,000 whales, including 414 fin whales. In 2013 alone, Icelandic whalers killed 134 fin whales and 35 minke whales.

In December 2013, Iceland’s Minister of Fisheries issued a block quota permitting the yearly killing of 154 fin whales and 229 minke whales from 2014 to 2018.¹ In March 2014, the Minister extended the minke whale block quota to 2019.² These quotas were set arbitrarily and unilaterally, and do not have the approval of either the International Whaling Commission (IWC) or its Scientific Committee. With these activities Iceland is making a mockery of the IWC commercial whaling moratorium and the IWC itself.

Last month, Iceland’s sole fin whaling company Hvalur hf, owned by Kristjan Loftsson, exported a shocking volume of around 2,000 metric tons of whale products. The ship carrying these products is en route to Japan. It is apparently using a route via the coast of Africa, likely a conscious effort to avoid EU ports given the present EU discussion on possible transit bans. Including this shipment, more than 5,000 tonnes of whale meat and blubber have been exported to Japan since Iceland’s resumption of commercial whaling in 2006.

Although this trade is occurring under Iceland’s reservation to the CITES Appendix I listing for the great whales, the UNEP World Conservation Monitoring Centre (WCMC) highlighted in a report of March 2013 that sizeable levels of trade under reservation “may undermine the effectiveness of Appendix I listings.”

In a landmark verdict on 31st March 2014, the International Court of Justice, responding to a case brought by Australia and New Zealand, halted Japan’s current Antarctic whaling. Moreover, the United States recently announced a series of diplomatic measures against Iceland over its ongoing commercial whaling and international trade in such products.

Our millions of EU-based supporters expect the European Union to take a leadership role in stopping the unauthorized whaling in our region. The undersigning organisations therefore ask the European Commission to consult with Member States and to:

1) urgently coordinate a demarche against Icelandic whaling with other concerned IWC member governments; and
2) prepare a resolution expressing concern about Icelandic commercial whaling and trade for the forthcoming IWC meeting in September; and
3) consider a suite of possible meaningful actions and measures against Iceland to be implemented if Iceland continues its whaling activities.

Over the last few years, the European Union has remained silent with regards to Iceland – presumably in the hope that if Iceland became an EU Member State it would have to stop its whaling activities in compliance with EU legislation, which provides strong protection against hunting and trade for all cetaceans. The accession process has been repeatedly delayed and finally stopped unilaterally by Iceland.

We now respectfully request that the EU does not delay action any further and immediately calls for strong measures to stop Iceland’s whaling and trade.

Yours sincerely,

Dr. Christoph Schmidt, Director Pro Wildlife, Germany
